My thirteen-year-old, Nathaniel, dropped a mug on the kitchen floor and it broke, I, [his mother Lola] 'completely lost it'.	Anger 80	'The kid is spoiled to death, he just doesn't realise that things cost money, he just doesn't give a damn. He thinks I'll clear up after him, buy everything that's necessary and just act as his slave. Well, it's about time he learned a lesson.'	I completely lost it and shouted at him

More helpful appraisal/Judgment

How else might you have appraised the situation? To determine this you might like to consider the following:

5. Thinking 'Errors'

What errors are you making (selective perception, mind-reading, all-or-nothing thinking, emotive language, overgeneralisation)?

Emotive language: 'he doesn't give a damn, he thinks I'll act like his slave, it's about time he learned a lesson'

Mind-reading: how do I know he doesn't give a damn?

Maybe overgeneralising: just because he drops the occasional mug it doesn't mean he doesn't care about things or that he sees me as a slave.
